A represents the “naturalist.” Naturalists experience God through nature, the outdoors in the natural world of the sky, mountains and valleys, rivers and oceans, flowers and trees, insects and animals.

They would rather take a walk in the park than be at a basketball game or in a coffee shop. If you are a naturalist, your spirituality allows you to feel God through the beauty and order of the things He created. You find peace and comfort in God’s creation. It’s the place where your heart opens up to God and you find yourself communicating with God through nature.

B is the Sensor, the person who feels God in the beauty she or he feels around them. The Sensor experiences their Heavenly Parent through the senses. If you are a Sensor, you may feel God deeply in the incense and candles of an ornate cathedral or quiet grotto, or in a masterpiece painting depicting a scene from the Bible. Sometimes music will touch you to the core of your soul and confront you with the blinding truth that “there is a God.” You relish the beautiful works of art, of architecture, of design that were created by God’s creative sons and daughters.

C is the Traditionalist, who experiences God in tradition. The Traditionalist finds God in the venerable, generations-old core of beliefs, rituals and symbols. You are attracted to the sacred and the experience of the holy found in ritual. You may be a new believer who is tapping with joy and exaltation into an ancient way that is not your own. In either case, you take comfort in rituals, in the age-old patterns of birth, life, death and new life that reside within God’s eternity.

D The Ascetic experiences God in simplicity. He or she longs to deepen their relationship with God one-on-one, alone in their Heavenly Parent’s presence, which they access by spiritual disciplines, especially of self-renunciation. If you enjoy and need solitude to connect to God, and tend to appreciate self-discipline, spiritual practices, self-sacrifice and endurance, this could be you. You seek the inner life through meditation, fasting, aloneness, and quiet time. You consider many material things and excesses to be distractions from the highest quest, which is to know God. You also are deeply committed to discovering your own true identity, your original “I.” Monks, hermits and yogis have a natural inclination toward this style.

E represents the “activist.” The conscience is where the Activist first feels the tug of God. She or he feels close to their Heavenly Parent when they are confronting evil and injustice. They are moved by a sense of God’s aching heart over the suffering of the people of this world, the abuse of power and oppression of the poor. If you are an Activist, you feel God when your conscience is burning and calling you to a struggle for a cause. You may be shy, but God compels you to express your passionate beliefs about how to rectify wrongs.

F is the Caregiver, who experiences God when helping those in need. It is in the act of caring that you experience God’s heart the most and come to know God’s love and feel God’s compassion. If you are a Caregiver, your compassionate heart bursts with concern and energy to heal, uplift and encourage those in need, representing God’s parental love. When you are not with them, you will be praying for their healing and thinking about what you can do for them. Teachers, doctors, nurses, counselors, and all parents fit into this style as they care for students, the infirm and those in need of guidance and nurture. Those with the Compassionate Heart style are good listeners, with sensitivity to others’ needs before their own.

G is the Enthusiast, who experiences God in expressive and active devotion. If you are an Enthusiast, you like to worship God with bodily enthusiasm. When worship music touches your soul, you naturally and unselfconsciously express it physically and tears well up in your eyes. You probably love to hang out with others who find their Heavenly Parent in gatherings of celebration, song, preaching and sharing. You like to sing out to God and the larger the crowd, the more you feel God’s presence and power.

H is the Contemplative. You experience God with spiritual antennae that discern the eternity of God. You are a person of reflection and deep consideration in your love of our Heavenly Parent. As you adore the glory of the Creator, you will sometimes write moving poetry, passionate literature, or heartfelt songs or produce works of art. If you are a Contemplative, you thrive in the mystical relationship with God and express your communion with the Creator by fashioning your thoughts into form, as objects of truth revealing God. It could be art or music. Contemplatives often become writers of scripture or spiritual literature. This is different from an ascetic, who needs solitude and who is more focused on practicing the spiritual disciplines of their faith. The Contemplative forms new expressions of faith through processing their insights and using their creativity to express them.

I is the Intellectual, who experiences God when he or she gains knowledge and understanding. The Intellectual discovers the spirit of God in theology, science and history. If you are an Intellectual, you tend to value research and analysis in your search for our Heavenly Parent. You appreciate proofs, thoroughness, criticism and clarifications. You probably have some concern about believers having a reasonable and sensible understanding of God’s reality. Your spirit thrives on the deep and rich details of what scripture, theology, history and science have to say about God.
